In traveling over the scenes of Custer's Closing labor one of the most pathetic memorials of the dreadful conflict is presented in great numbers—the mouldering bones of men, dry as well bleached. Under Custer's own order the Commissioner Park an adjoining the Northern Pacific Railroad to Yellowstone Park an adjoining portion of the park, using a constitution and bleached for the Dutch Department Cemetery. It had been supposed that to the soldiers of this extraordinary corps had been accorded the honor of burial in the soil of the Republic, but the Government, in the name of the President and the Secretary of the Interior, would offer a compromise. Some may decide as to whether the Government will be justified in selling the bones of the soldiers, which are the property of the people, to help pay the expenses of the visit to the Park. The Secretary of War will be consulted in the matter, and the Secretary of the Interior will be consulted in the matter, and the Secretary of the Interior will be consulted in the matter, and the Secretary of the Interior

MASSIVE ASSIDENTS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 30.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, the total number of accidents resulting in loss of life was thirty-four, of which twelve were from explosions, five from fire, eleven from collisions, and six from steam, wrecks, and sinkers. The total loss and by accidents from various causes during the year was 304, of which 2,272 were from the explosion of accidental causes of steam, eighty-two from collisions, forty-two from fire, fifty from wrecks or foundering, thirty-three from accidental drowning, and five from other causes. As compared with the previous fiscal year the number of accidents or steamers was less, while the loss of life was greater, as the following table will show:

Total number of accidents to steamers occurring in the year ended June 30, 1888, 41; in 1889, 34, decrease, 7.

Total number of lives lost in 1888, 300; in 1889, 304, increase, 4.

The most terrible accident to steamers occurring in the year ended June 30, 1889, was the explosion of the boiler of the steamer Mississippi, on the Mississippi River, on the night of April 27, 1889, by which 150 persons lost their lives. The next most terrible accident was the explosion of the boiler of the steamer Bostona, on the Ohio River, on the night of May 9, 1889, by which 100 persons lost their lives. The next most terrible accident was the explosion of the boiler of the steamer Sultana, on the Mississippi River, on the night of April 27, 1865, by which 150 persons lost their lives.

The number of persons killed by accidents caused by collisions during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 11, and the number injured was 11. The number killed by accidents caused by fire during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 5, and the number injured was 11. The number killed by accidents caused by wrecks during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 50, and the number injured was 11. The number killed by accidents caused by foundering during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 50, and the number injured was 11. The number killed by accidents caused by accidental drowning during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 33, and the number injured was 11. The number killed by accidents caused by other causes during the year ended June 30, 1889, was 5, and the number injured was 11.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 30.—[Special.]—The decision of Commissioner Stone was received with great satisfaction today at the General Land-Office. This decision, as stated in a dispatch from Cheyenne, affects vast numbers of the Western States and territories. When Commissioner Sparks was asked this afternoon today, he said that he was very much pleased to have the opinion of the Attorney-General. "This had to do," said he, "with the question of the validity of fencing public lands. It was decided that the enclosure of vacant public lands was unlawful and injurious, but that under some circumstances the Department of Justice would not move. You have been doing for a year or more, the legal plan is not that the action taken by the Department of Justice must have representations and verified by a statement for the Government." The Interior Department, and Judge Sparks, in the performance of their duties, have been compelled to act in accordance with the law, and the decision of the Attorney-General is the result of the action of the Department of Justice. The decision will be of great advantage to the Government."

ROCHESTER'S HORROR.

Gov. Hubbard, of Minnesota, Visits the Scene of Tuesday's Terrible Cyclone.

The First Reports Not Greatly Exaggerated—Statement of the Relief Committee.

Thirty-one People Dead, 130 Homes Destroyed, and Many Families Destitute.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Aug. 30.—Gov. Hubbard arrived in the city this morning, and, accompanied by members of the Relief Committee, made an inspection about the ruins, and fully satisfied himself that the reports of the destruction were not at all exaggerated. Interested to attend a meeting of the Relief Committee, and recommended the work done and about taken for the further operation by the committee. He suggested that the committee prepare 1,000 circulars, of which to receive [illegible] donations by the representatives, the following circular has been written, and will be sent this to all parts of the State immediately:

The morning of Aug. 20 a terrific cyclone passed through the city of Rochester, destroying [illegible] and [illegible] injuring many others, a great number of [illegible], many [illegible] and rendering [illegible] homeless. COMTE DE CHAMBORD.

His Death.

VIENNA, Aug. 25.—The Comte de Chambord died at the address used [illegible] this morning. His sufferings [illegible] were fearful, but he maintained his fortitude to the last. The Carmelite ex-Chancellor was carried from the sick room unconscious. The friends and members of the household were assembled in the death-chamber at 4 o'clock. All knew the hands of the royal Count, and were deeply moved. The body will be embalmed [illegible]. The corpse of the Count's dearly loved consort of the monarch, clients, and servants of the following and management of the Chambordists. The Count and Countess of Bardi and Duke and Duchess of Modena were evident when the Count died.

The Legitimist position to hold a grand demonstration at Goritz on the occasion of the interment of the chevalier there.

The Times starts anew the personal motives of the deceased.

Count Bardi closed the dead monk's eyes. The body is crumbling to a skeleton. The remains will be in state in the sick-room to-day, after the post-mortem examination, when they will be taken to the great saloon. The Legitimist papers of Paris unofficially announce the French monarchy dead.

"Here ends in death, more calm and dignity."

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The Gazette of Paris, in announcing the death, says: "Henri Dieudonné, Comte de Chambord."

The Republican Journals await impatiently to-day to-morrow's [illegible] to-day to-morrow to Chambord, and only to-morrow [illegible] to the sincerity of the demand. The Royalist papers have occupied with mourning borders and are reserved in their comments regarding the consequences of the Count's death. The body will be buried in the side of that of Charles the Tenth. The will of the Count will be opened in the presence of a high officer of the Austrian Court.

Career.

Comte de Chambord was [illegible] Duchess of Berri, head of the elder branch of the Bourbons, was born in Paris Sept. 29, 1820. His father, the [illegible] Duke of Berri, was assassinated seven months before the birth of the Count. His mother, Caroline, was Princess of the two Sicilies. His boyhood was [illegible] with great grief, under the [illegible] Bourbon, Louis Philippe, [illegible] king seat. The event that happened to one of Lamartine's most [illegible] poems. He was [illegible] with a request for a [illegible] [illegible] years old, and he [illegible] was dethroned Prince of the old monarchy. Thereafter Count [illegible] sufficient to his favor in 1830, and spared him to be [illegible] pretender King, under the name of Henry V., the destiny of the family found him [illegible] exile. While visiting the various courts of Europe he was treated as a sovereign. He [illegible] for some time in London, occupying a house in Belgrave Square, but, in 1842, he made his entrance into politics, openly asserting his rights to the French throne, and surrounding himself with a number of Legitimist nobles. These were later to contract the daughter of the Duke of Modena. The union was fruitless. Long after he inherited the large fortune of his grandfather and aunts and established himself at Frohsdorf, near Vienna.

At the time at Venice with his mother when the events of February took place, but remained himself with inviting [illegible] to accept that Louis Napoleon was starting at the throne. At this juncture of affairs he made his first [illegible] to recognize the new [illegible] of the Bourbon family. The [illegible] of the Empire in 1852 caused the Count to maintain the title of Bourbon, [illegible] the efforts to bring [illegible] and [illegible] to the basis of its party. In 1865 he declared himself in favor of supporting the [illegible] action of the Pope.

At the beginning of the Franco-Prussian War he placed his children at Chambord at the disposal of the wife, and gave, in addition, the sum of 6,000 francs. From the interior of Switzerland he issued a proclamation [illegible] to [illegible] the invasion [illegible] the territory of France if the people would rally to its support. In 1871 he addressed a proclamation to all the [illegible] of France concerning the [illegible] Assembly of Paris" [illegible] Count of Paris."

The decided stand taken by the Count on the Papal question gained him no new [illegible] among the people of France, who [illegible] retain a return of the Bourbon line. His [illegible] paper on this question made still the [illegible] phrase: "The word is to France and the King is to rule." In a proclamation dated at Chambord on July 20, 1873, he declared, in a public document, the exact title to the Paris and various [illegible] of Chambord, where he received many visitors. In his manifesto he declared the right of universal suffrage and a constitutional form of government with two houses, but denied the [illegible] of the majority of the [illegible], which he termed a revolt of a minority against the [illegible] of the country. Above all, he refused to give up the standard of Henry IV., France [illegible] and Joan of Arc. At the same time he declared he would go into voluntary exile [illegible] to prevent direful [illegible].

The effect of the declaration was marked. [illegible] to it, but the heart of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 30.—[Special.]—The Northwestern Traffic Association met at the Lake Lafayette this morning to arrange a division of the Pacific coast business and to admit the Northern Pacific's territory. Mr. Caruss, Commissioner of the Traffic Association, was not present. Fred Bottler, of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, arrived in time to be present. J. M. Hannaford was the only representative of the Northern Pacific present. The results of the meeting amount to no settlement to all parties. The same privileges, rates, and divisions are given to the Northern Pacific as have been accorded to the Union Pacific. Thus, whatever Chicago roads, save the Union Pacific, may publish rates between the Eastern Pacific points, the Northern Pacific can publish the same to Puget Sound. The privileges of equipping the coast to Puget Sound, via Portland and the Transcontinental lines, are granted.

Eastern Shippers of Short-Haured Freight Secure Rates Almost Identical with Those Given a Man Who Has No Freight to Forward.

The inability to agree over the rate agreement for crossing mississippi River traffic to and the rate points from which the Missouri River and to collecting 3 per cent have discovered that most of the time was spent making new tariff freight rates, and when the officials in question met the latter's representatives were in readiness to sign the agreement which had been agreed to by all of the more conservative lines as to rates disputed, and they are positively sticking to the assertion that it is entirely impossible to maintain the pool, and that nothing but the restoration of rates will help the condition which exists. The main dispatches of St. Thomas C. The voting of representatives, and probably to all classes of freight. It is stated that several of the roads are allowing certain shippers to ship at a less rate than others, and that the Commissioner has not been satisfied with the Commissioner's decision. Many roads have been given to the Northern Pacific in the Union Pacific, and the Northern Pacific has been given to the Union Pacific. Thus, when the Chicago, Union Pacific has granted to the Northern Pacific, the Northern Pacific has the privilege of equipping the coast to Puget Sound, via Portland and the Transcontinental lines, are granted.

The beautiful Jubilee Publication now in the course of publication by the Messrs. Appleton, of the first eleven volumes of Rees, general topics of which the Standard of the day was adopted. It is a popular Cyclopedia, which it was, it maintained its high standing from the great work of a class of literature to demonstrate fully excellent plans of the practicability of the following plans: Mrs. Gilchrist's interesting compilation, just from the skillful arrangement of materials and the intelligence and good taste of the work commands, but biography of Mary Lamb is little else worthily this novel to all its editions and to charm. Let it not of unchallenged fact to be submitted to in-dangers that labors of our authors, whose excellent portions values to greater excellence this for last week from the pens of writing to success. In a field which has been so often occupied, the most excellent of Shakespeare's plays, Mrs. Gilchrist has not brought to light much that is new, but she has studied, by diligent examination, that was not before known to many readers of Lamb's biography with Coleridge, and has also identified a published letter of Charles Lloyd's daughter to Ullmann to have been, as charged, "the chief to great materials of interest on the sudden death of his mother," as the only letter from the poet to Lamb that has been preserved, and accepted two or more of earlier letters to disprove that the father of Charles and Mary suffered their mother "rarely three times, instead of only a few months," and that Charles lived to "Chapel Street, Pentonville, not a few months, but three years." Readers of Mrs. Gilchrist's book need to be cautioned not to take from Mary Lamb's memoir of Godwin's, published pathetic to the British Lady's Magazine for April, 1815.

Mary Anne Lamb. New York: D. Charles Co. Mrs. Ewan Thomas, Dec. 5, 1795. She early exhibited a tendency to insanity, showing the subsequent development of which was in part to the hereditary weakness of an affectionate mother, and in part to the pressure to the Lamb family of an old maid's means, whose only object, from 1792 to 1796, was this sufferings and misfortunes. Mary was placed at a boarding school at Hackney, but was taken home to Mrs. Field, whose mother, Mrs. Lamb, had an object of great value. Soon after this she was put at a boarding school in Fetter Lane, kept by one William Hirst, whose qualifications, "Teacher of Mathematics and Languages," was hardly justified by a certificate which included "nothing to the contrary with a good character." The next year they took private lodgings in the library of her father's employer, Mr. Salt, and in an old house at Blakesmoor, the deserted mansion of the Plumer whose housekeeper was Mary's maternal grandmother. Mrs. Field is the letter she found and read an account entitled "Recollections." In general "The result was not unfavorable to Mary, who was fully convinced of the unsoundness of her judgment, "in which Hirst's school would agree with her." She was not brought to light much that is new, but she has studied, by diligent examination, that was not before known to many readers of Lamb's biography with Coleridge, and has also identified a published letter of Charles Lloyd's daughter to Ullmann to have been, as charged, "the chief to great materials of interest on the sudden death of his mother," as the only letter from the poet to Lamb that has been preserved, and accepted two or more of earlier letters to disprove that the father of Charles and Mary suffered their mother "rarely three times, instead of only a few months," and that Charles lived to "Chapel Street, Pentonville, not a few months, but three years." ST. PAUL.

Aug. 14.—[Special Telegram to The Tribune.]—Peter Hall, the arrested counterfeiter, was before Commissioner Wilson this morning, and waived examination. He was committed to the county jail in default of $5,000 bail. Hall's wife and children are still in this city, and it is said that they will remain here during the trial of the husband and father. Hall is a resident of Chicago, and has been engaged in the manufacture of counterfeit money for a number of years. He has been arrested several times, but has always managed to escape conviction. He is a man about 40 years of age, and has a wife and two children.

WINONA.

Aug. 14.—[Special Telegram to The Tribune.]—The Rev. C. W. Brickell, of the Diocese of Fond du Lac, has been offered and has accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of this city. This restores the Rev. Mr. Brickell to his former parish, which he left about two years ago. The Rev. Mr. Young, now assistant rector of St. Paul's Church, resigned.

ALBERT LEA.

John S. Jones, aged 9 years, died of the epidemic of diphtheria, last night, after a short illness. He was an only child and a favorite of numerous friends.

Jacob Hayes, a well-to-do farmer residing near Hayward, was unexpectedly last night relieved of $1,000 in bills. The money was secured in a belt around the waist of Mr. Hayes, and was taken from him while he was asleep. The loss will be a severe one to Mr. Hayes, as the money represented the savings of many years. The thief or thieves escaped without leaving a clue to their identity.

Charles Gordon, an old settler and well-known citizen of Hazel Grove, Town of Concordia, died recently, and was buried last night.
